Luther Price, Sorry, 2005–12

Luther Price, Sorry, 2005–12

Luther Price once described the value of process: "It's not always about what you are working on.....but how it gets there." It took him seven years and 80 handmade slides to get to his collage-film, Sorry. Like large portions of his work—encompassing performance, films, and slides—Sorry includes scenes of suburban family life melded, in this case, with a 1940s film about Jesus and the Crucifixion.

Before Sorry, Price crafted new films out of recombined old films, manipulating the celluloid in a variety of ways. In the early 2000s, he shifted his energy to slides, which he refers to as "little collage pieces," sandwiching together snippets of film with leaves, dead insects, ink, and detritus. He sequenced the slides into narratives, with Sorry among his first. "..........It's an old story .....told over and over and over again...........," he wrote of the work's subject. "I'm just telling it one more time......."
