To make this series, Katy Grannan turned the sun-drenched streets of California into an impromptu portrait studio. Each photograph is the result of an on-the-spot collaboration, made with the willing participation of her subjects—many of whom she has known for years—and always compensating them for their time. Often using stark white walls as a backdrop, Grannan creates images that evoke the spontaneity of candid street photography and capture the individuality of her subjects—creating a tension between anonymity and the desire to be seen. Grannan has said of her process, "I think a lot of time people think the artist is the author, when in fact it is so much more collaborative."
