

- Working with stakeholders: Stakeholders are all groups within the business that are directly or indirectly involved in achieving the organization's purpose. Stakeholders can be split into internal and external stakeholders. Internal stakeholders are those who are directly involved in the organization's activities. External stakeholders are those who are indirectly involved in the organization's activities.
 - Working with stakeholders involves identifying the interests, needs, and expectations of all stakeholders, understanding the relationships between them, and developing strategies to manage these relationships effectively. This involves communication, negotiation, and collaboration.
 - Working with stakeholders involves identifying the interests, needs, and expectations of all stakeholders, understanding the relationships between them, and developing strategies to manage these relationships effectively. This involves communication, negotiation, and collaboration.
 - Working with stakeholders involves identifying the interests, needs, and expectations of all stakeholders, understanding the relationships between them, and developing strategies to manage these relationships effectively. This involves communication, negotiation, and collaboration.
 - Working with stakeholders involves identifying the interests, needs, and expectations of all stakeholders, understanding the relationships between them, and developing strategies to manage these relationships effectively. This involves communication, negotiation, and collaboration.
- Target customers are the specific groups of people that a business aims to serve. They are the primary beneficiaries of the business's products and services. Target customers are identified through market research and analysis, and they are the focus of the business's marketing and sales efforts.
- Understanding the target customer involves identifying their needs, wants, and expectations, and developing strategies to meet these needs effectively. This involves market research, segmentation, and targeting.
- Identify the target customer and their needs and wants.
 - Develop a marketing strategy to reach the target customer.
 - Implement the marketing strategy and monitor the results.
 - Adjust the marketing strategy as needed to improve performance.